

£200k Employment Win for Fifteen Staff

70 former employees of Jamie Oliver's Fifteen Restaurant in Mawgan Porth and the associated Cornwall Food Foundation in Truro have won a total of £200k at an employment tribunal following a failure in the redundancy process.

The claim was made by Citizens Advice Cornwall on behalf of staff who lost their jobs after the trust closed suddenly last December. The law requires employers to consult with staff for at least 30 days when 20 or more employees are likely to be made redundant.

Citizens Advice made sure the former employees knew about their rights and helped them make applications to the tribunal for the award from the Redundancy Payments Scheme

Citizens Advice Adviser, Martin Jackson, who led the case, said:

"This is a great result for the former employees. The extra money will help tide them over Christmas. Many have suffered a double whammy from being made redundant with no notice last winter and since then have been unable to find stable jobs in hospitality and catering due to lockdown."

Help Us Help Cornwall

We've seen a big increase in the number of people coming to Citizens Advice for help in Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly since the start of lockdown in March.

For many people, we've been able to put their minds at rest by pointing them in the right direction - for others we've acted as a lifeline, helping with benefit applications, rent payments, debt, accommodation and redundancy, as well as managing relationship and family breakdowns.

But to ensure this work continues in the future we need your help with donations. As a charity, Citizens Advice Cornwall depends on grants from hard-pressed local authority budgets and contributions from businesses and members of the community.

Our service is free of charge to everyone and we never solicit donations from people who come to see us, many of whom are financially hard-pressed.

If you're able to support us by making a donation, fundraising or putting us in touch with a corporate donor or charitable trust please get in contact with Business Development Officer, Pippa Cann at pippa.cann@citizensadvicecornwall.org.uk

Landlords Urged to Seek Help if Rents Dry-up

Citizens Advice Cornwall is urging landlords to seek help if their own homes and finances are at risk because of tenants' non-payments of rents during the coronavirus restrictions.

The lockdown restrictions have meant many tenants have been unable to afford their full rents, while the Government has banned landlords from evicting tenants, except for limited cases of anti-social behaviour.

While major landlords with multiple properties, housing associations and local authorities have been able to weather the reduced income, concern is growing for landlords who have just one or two properties and now find themselves in financial difficulties.

Citizens Advice Cornwall Debt and Advice Supervisor, Andrew Berry, said:

"Just like their tenants, some landlords are also facing difficulties navigating the choppy financial waters caused by coronavirus lockdowns.

"This is especially the case for small landlords who rely on rents for a large part of their income, or have a buy to let/rent mortgage on their tenants' property as the mortgage holiday scheme ended last month.

"We want to work with landlords as well as tenants, to ensure there is still a good stock of housing available for rent in Cornwall. It's in no-one's interest for good landlords to be driven out of business because of lockdown which is out of their control."

Citizens Advice has a team of dedicated advisers who may be able to help landlords and tenants find a solution before eviction notices are served.
